DUPLICATE PRINTS OF ETCHINGS CAN, IN MOST CASES, BE SUPPLIED.

The Schools of The Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts train students in painting, sculpture and illustration. The success achieved by the Schools is testified to by the number of artists of great reputation who received their training in them.

The present instructors are: Hugh H. Breckenridge, Charles Grafly, Henry McCarter, Joseph T. Pearson, Jr., Daniel Garber, Philip L. Hale, Emil Carlsen, Henry Erdmann Radasch, M.Sc., M.D., Edwin Howland Blashfield, Arthur B. Carles, John F. Harbeson, B.S., M.S.A., and Charles De Geer. Detailed information in regard to the Schools will gladly be furnished to any one interested in the subject. The second term of the present school year begins January 28, 1918, but students may enter at any time.

PLAN OF THE ACADEMY GALLERIES

THE PHILADELPHIA WATER COLOR PRIZE

A prize of two hundred dollars, known as the Philadelphia Water Color Prize, is offered this year by friends of Water Color Painting. This prize will be awarded to that American Artist or Resident Foreign Artist showing the strongest Water Color or group of Water Colors in the Exhibition. The Jury of Artists will make the award, but may withhold the prize if, in their judgment, no work is of sufficient merit. The prize has been previously awarded to Alice Schille and Dodge MacKnight.

THE BECK PRIZE

Through the liberality of Mr. Charles W. Beck, Jr., a prize of One Hundred Dollars is awarded this year for the twelfth time to the best work in this exhibition, which has been reproduced in color. The award is made by the Jury of Selection. The prize has been previously awarded to Joseph Lindon Smith, Henry McCarter, Elizabeth Shippen Green, Maxfield Parrish, Ernest L. Blumenschein, N. C. Wyeth, Jessie Willcox Smith, W. J. Aylward, Jules Guérin, Thornton Oakley and Blanche Greer.

MINIATURE PAINTERS' MEDAL OF HONOR

The Society's Medal of Honor, bronze, is awarded at the discretion of its Officers, in recognition of high achievement, to Miniature Painters whose works are in the Annual Exhibition. This medal is awarded but once to the same artist. 1916, Laura Coombs Hills. 1917, Lucy May Stanton.

Lincoln.

c—The Armies of the Earth. "The Kingdom of Unity suffereth Violence and the violent would take it by storm." "They shall look upon Me whom they have pierced." "To a dream of a night vision, so shall the multitude of all the Nations be that fight." Isaiah.

d—The Slaves of the Earth. "They did set over them task-masters to afflict them with burdens, but the more they afflicted them the more they multiplied and grew." "I have seen the affliction of My people and have heard their cry—and I will redeem them with a stretched-out arm and with great judgments." Exodus.

e—Supreme Manifestation of Enlightenment in International Unity—Prophecy of William Penn. "He carried me away to a great and high Mountain and showed me that Great City—and he showed me a pure River of Water of Life clear as crystal proceeding out of the Throne. And the Kings of the Earth do bring their Glory and Honour into it—in the midst of the street of it, and on either side of the River was there the Tree of Life—and the leaves of the Tree were for the Healing of the Nations."

WAR DRAWINGS

BY JOSEPH PENNELL

FOREWORD BY H. G. WELLS

There is still a delusion that war is conducted and controlled by gentlemen in red tabs, gold lace and spurs; that it is an affair in which infantry fights in formation, cavalry charges gallantly upon field-guns, and supply trains of horse-drawn wagons follow up the Napoleonic manœuvres of the various generals. Some such idea seemed to prevail even in the highest quarters until the battle of the Aisne. Things had happened at Liège and Namur that were a little perplexing, but it was only by the end of 1914 that the mass of people began to realize that there was a new sort of war in progress. The bright bayonet blade of the old warfare had broken off, and we were fighting with the butt end. The armies of the world to-day are undergoing rather belatedly the same revolution that overtook our navies in the 'seventies and 'eighties. The engineer has got hold of them. The avalanche of change has started; it will not rest again until it has buried every scrap of the soldier's solemn paraphernalia of horse and drill, as completely as it has buried the frigates and three-deckers of fifty years ago.

The form and texture of the coming things are not yet to be seen in their completeness upon the modern battle-field. One swallow does not make a summer, nor a handful of aëroplanes, a "tank" or so, a few acres of shell craters, and a village here and there, pounded out of recognition, do more than foreshadow the spectacle of modernized war on land. War by these developments has become the monopoly of the five great industrial powers; it is their alternative to end or evolve it; and if they continue to disagree, then it must needs become a spectacle of majestic horror such as no man can yet mount a picture of. It has been wise of Mr. Pennell, therefore, to make his pictures of modern warfare not upon the battlefield, but among the huge industrial apparatus that is thrusting behind and thrusting up through the war of the gentlemen in spurs. He gives us the splendors and immensities of forge and gun-pit, furnace and mine-shaft. He shows you how great they are and how terrible. Among them go the little figures of men, robbed of all dominance, robbed of all individual quality. He leaves it for you to draw the obvious conclusion that presently, if we cannot contrive to put an end to war, blacknesses like these, enormities and flaries and towering threats, will follow in the track of the "tanks" and come trampling over the bickering confusion of mankind.

There is something very striking in these insignificant and incidental men that Mr. Pennell shows us. Nowhere does a man dominate in all these wonderful pictures. You may argue, perhaps, that that is untrue to the essential realities; all this array of machine and workshop, all the marshalled power and purpose, has been the creation of inventor and business organizer. But are we not a little too free with that word "creation"? Falstaff was a "creation" perhaps, of the Sistine sibyls; there we have indubitably an end conceived and sought and achieved; but did these inventors and business organizers do more than heed certain unavoidable imperatives? Seeking coal they were obliged to mine in a certain way: Seeking steel they had to do this and this and not that and that; seeking profit they had to obey the imperative of economy. So little did they plan their ends that most of these manufacturers speak with a kind of astonishment of the deadly use to which their works are put. They find themselves making the new war as a man might wake out of some drugged condition to find himself strangling his mother.

So that Mr. Pennell's sketchy and transient human figures seem altogether right to me. He sees these forges, workshops, cranes and the like, as inhuman and as wonderful as clics or great caves or icebergs or the stars. They are a new aspect of the logic of physical necessity that made all these older things, and he seizes upon the majesty and beauty of their dimensions with an entire impartiality. And they are as impartial. They are arranged to shape out the life of a shell, from the mine to the great gun; nothing remains of their history to show except the ammunition dump, the gun in action and the shell burst. Upon this theme all these great appearances are strung to-day. But to-morrow they may be strung upon some other and nobler purpose. These gigantic beings, of which the engineer is the master and slave, are neither benevolent nor malignant. To-day they produce destruction, they are the slaves of the spur; to-morrow they will bridge and carry and house and help again.

ENGLISH WAR WORK:

NOTES BY THE ARTIST

JOSEPH PENNELL.

863 Coal Mines.

Up above the new munition town, seen amid the smoke, is the old colliery town, and above that the shafts of the mines. As I drew, a corporal's guard came upon me. Had I my papers? It was in a prohibited area. "I never dare to stir without them—I sleep with them. And what credentials have you?" "Only them dirty rags," said he, pointing to his uniform.

864 Iron Mine.

Away off in the hills, but near the sea, is this great gulf fixed—a great gash—and in this is the mine, like the open mines of America, though no longer worked. But all around and about are others working, from which ore is taken, while all the hills are crowned by shafts to-day bringing up more ore than ever before.

865 Shot.

This is what I see every night out of my window—have seen for two years and some months, and would give anything never to see again. Yet Wells says it—the drawing of the shot tower—is the only commonplace subject among them all.

866 The Land of Iron and Steel.

A land of mist and mystery in the morning, of glitter and glare at noon, of fire and fury at night. For work never ceases in the Land of Iron and Steel. The furnaces stand in long rows on each side, a mighty avenue lined with towers and castles; beyond, the river of work; and beyond that, more work castles and work palaces.

867 Making Pig Iron.

Across the great work avenue, half filled with plots, not of flowers but patterns of cooling metal, are other furnaces seen amid rising smoke and steam.

868 The Big Gate.

Though the proportions might be better, this simple dignified entrance to the Work Temple is as fine as though it were covered with carving, and the feeling of mystery within as great as when the cathedral doors open at the end of mass.

And though there was no music, there came forth the endless roaring of the Looms of War. Instead of acolytes were workmen, and in solemn procession the great ladles filled with fire moved to and fro, and the great cranes stalked about; their drivers popes under their umbrellas.

869 The Perambulator.

From berteath a fiery floor—from a fiery furnace—this monster drags the glowing ingots and carries them off to other furnaces, or presses, or rolling mills, or hammers, and the workmen tell you, as the policemen do in America, "Mind your step; safety first."

870 Munition Works.

I have no idea how many of these workscapes I have drawn, etched, lithographed, painted. I am told I should not do so many; I "spoilt the market." But I shall draw them wherever and whenever I find them—or, rather, find that they appeal to me. Whoever criticized an Old Master for his thousands of sketches

And how much finer are the lines of chimneys than the lines of trees, while the slowly rising smoke gives the sky a beauty it never had before.

871 Shops at Night.

Black was the bridge, black the crowd crossing it, black the crowded trams, the blue-white light glowed from the ever-working shops, and the lights upon the cranes by the river side, on the railroad tracks, suggested the workscape by their ever-winking, twinkling lines and groups and dots and masses of lamps.

872 Within the Furnace.

After the pig iron is melted in the long rows of furnaces, they are tapped, and the liquid fire runs into the great ladles; and then the great cranes, with their two great claws, pick up the ladles and carry them off, and pour the molten metal into crucibles, where it cools into ingots.

873 From the Top of Furnace.

A subject like one seen from the top of a skyscraper—only that is soundless, this is endless sound. From the skyscraper you look down on little dots of men; here on trains and cranes. And as you look a charge is emptied into the furnace—and a whole place bursts into flame, trembles, roars, then sighs and dies away. Always down below the little figures wheel barrows and push carts. And one day as I talked to a foreman, a lady workman in pants, who must have been the champion of her hockey club, came up, set down her barrow, and said: "Mr. Superintendent, a boy has been grossly rude to me. What shall I do?" "Why, Laidee, 'it 'im over the 'ed with 'af a brick out cher barrer!" And she went her way.

874 The Jaws of Death.

From these jagged teeth the fiery serpent snorts, shrieking and squirming, vomiting sparks—it was an ingot just before—only to be drawn back again and again, longer and thinner, cast out in heat and noise infernal. Then it crawls away to cool in long bars, or to be cut into ingots by the guillotine.

875 The Presses.

Before the press its master stands; a white-hot ingot is put in, the press comes down, and in a moment it is the body of a shell. The master seizes it with his tongs, standing black against the burst of steam; he whirls it round, and two men take it in their tongs and carry it off red-hot to the branders.

876 The Urns.

In the heart of the big shop the big ladle, full of molten metal, fills the urns; then they are dragged out and carried away to be "bottled."

877 Bottling Big Shells.

This shop was an old factory where a big press had been set up. The walls had all been white-washed, and against them the press and the figures told stunningly. The afternoon I saw the bottling—the first time the big shells were bottled—the crane which was to carry them from the furnace to the press was not ready, and the work was done by men, but they made a far finer composition, for in these works it is seldom you see "the man power." The machines do all, and are more human than the men who manage them.

878 The Great Hammer.

The hammers forge and stamp and press the ingots into any shape the forge men wish.

879 Shell Factory.

I have drawn one of the shell factories that have grown up all over the country within the last year. It is wonderful to see these girls planing, grinding, polishing the shells; it fascinates, but is intolerable; it is horrible, when you think that all this is done to kill people. But you must not think; if you do you will go mad. The world is mad to-day.

880 Evening in Munition Country.

As I came back one evening from a hunt on the top of a trolley, or tram, for subjects, having found nothing, I found this. On one side the near shell factories glowing with blue white light; on the other the far-away furnaces bathed in fire; in the foreground the quiet canal and the noisy train, the twinkling signals below, and into the calm heavens the smoky incense of war slowly rising.

881 The Old Gun Pit.

At one period of their creation the guns are given an oil bath; the crane seizes them, lifts them, and then lowers them into the strange-shaped towers where they are heated; then it raises them again, and drops them into an oil bath, where they are left to harden and cool.

882 The New Gun Pit.

The new pits are like the old, only they are in a great hall, and instead of monstrous forms, there are marvellous effects—suggestions in mighty, lofty vagueness.

883 Bringing in the Gun.

On one side was the river, on the other "the bank"; between, the glass and iron palace, where the great turret was being built. And as I drew, and wanted something to show the might and the height of the building, the engine dragged in a gun to be fitted in the turret, and my subject was before me.

884 Bay of 1000 Girls.

One of nine or ten bays and other rooms besides, in this huge factory, the site of which they tell you was fields a few months ago.

There was scarce a man about the place—only those setting up and adjusting machines.

The women were doing everything, as I have tried to show. And one of the foreman said I showed too much.

"Now you 've drawered 'em 'uggin' 'emselfs; now I've told 'em they wasent to 'ug thei'selfs, and you've gone and done 'em a-doin' it." "Well, they were," said I.

885 Planing Big Shells.

This was an old disused shop, with great brick walls and small skylights and few windows, but it had been taken over as a munition works, the walls white-washed, and new machinery set up, and against the white walls the lathes and planes and cranes stood out. When I was there it was being fitted up, and the engineers told me, too, how fine it was at night, but I did not see it.

886 Munition Town.

All over the country these munition mushroom towns are springing up; usually they are dumped down all over the plains; this one climbed and covered the hillside, and so was picturesque—the others are pitiful. A little more money would have made them as decent as the workmen's dwellings at Panama; but that was not spent, and they are the most depressing human huts I have ever seen.

887 The Acolytes.

No cathedral is more impressive, no altar finer; but instead of decking it with flowers the men were making it ready to roll more armor plate. This drawing is but another proof that great work is great art, and that art to-day is joined to science—not religion; but the effect is just as fine.

888 Finishing Shells.

Larger shells being finished.

889 Taking Big Gun Away.

When this big gun had been fitted and worked in its turret, it was again taken out, carried to the river side, and, between them, the four cranes put it on a barge, and that carried it off to the ship or its carriage.

890 Building the Great Turret.

Story above story, all glass and iron, rises the shop where the great turrets are built, and below the floor in deep pits their bases stand. This is the other end of the shop in the previous picture. What struck me most, however, was that the open part of the turret made a design—the Pediment of War and Labor. Here was the Greek idea carried out by British workmen, and no British artist has ever seen it. But from something of this sort in Greece, Greek artists got their scheme of decoration when they were building the earliest temples.

891 Making Armor Plate.

I never had the chance to see a big plate rolled, but probably this little one was just as good. The hot metal was covered with brushwood, to turn off the cooling scale, which is like a beautiful patina upon it; and the brushwood blazed in the dark shop to the roof; while, as in all great work, only two or three men were about, the one who signalled in the foreground, and the one who ran the mill and controlled its rolls, standing like a statue over all.

892 Gun Forge.

When the solid metal has been roughly shaped in the furnace and press, it is again heated, and then the great chain carries it to the forge, and this monster crushes, forges, and molds it into shape—the shape of a gun.

893 The Old Shipyard.

The Admiralty would not let me draw the naval shipyards, but here were merchant ships being built. I have never seen anything like these cranes nor the way they started to build the ships out of doors anywhere, and the ships just grew, and the cranes came and helped to build them.

894 The Gantry.

A merchant shipyard. The gantry was more like those I have seen in Germany. If I had only been allowed to draw the naval yards I saw, I could have made this series complete, and no secrets would have been given away, but a record would have been made.

895 Ready for War.

The mounted howitzer was getting its finishing touches; it had been tested, and soon the great doors would open, the engine puffed in, carry it off on its long journey to the front, to do its infernal work—a triumph of misdirected energy and skill—for “War is Hell.”

896 Cutting and Turning a Big Gun.

All the week I was in this shop the big gun stood there on a great trestle, and all the while the great lathe or plane kept turning and turning at the end of it; once in a while a man would look at it, or do something to it, or pick up steel shavings, but all the while the machines kept turning, and all the while nothing seemed to happen—but I suppose it did; it was all silent, ceaseless force.

897 By-products.

The new sort of coke ovens are the most pictorial subjects I saw—when they are at work—because they are all effect, all bathed and wrapped in fume and steam and smoke; and these make for me, and give to me, my motives, though there is great work behind them.

898 The Great Tower.

From the blast furnaces the iron is brought to this yard, and carried by the cranes to the floor where I sat, to be seized by the great tongs and jaws, which were moving about behind me, and thrust into the furnaces and turned into steel—a flaming, roaring cavern, so bright that the furnace men wore colored goggles, so hot they buried themselves in their buttoned-up coats. It was not a pleasant place to work in.

899 Munitions City.

How wonderful is all this energy, this smoke, this color! How the city, set upon its hills, reveals and conceals itself! Yet its frown is terrible. Lately I read an art book which contained a few lines of description of these cities and the country where they are, for in order to show "the terror" of the land the author wrote of "the black smirched valleys," "the gloomy sky" under which "the train darted through forests of smoking chimney stacks" and over grimy, trough-like streets. That these might be wonderful, pictorial, never occurred to him.

900 Fitting Guns in Turrets.

I saw these smaller guns being fitted in a turret in another shop. They are put in and then the turret is tried. When I saw it, however, the whole floor was covered with parts; it was like a watchmaker's table magnified a million times. The parts were all behind me, and the authorities did not seem to want me to draw them. This is the same subject that I found at Essen, but so different.

901 Gun Testing.

They took me to the testing-ground, but on a day when there was no testing, for they told me I should have to go into a bomb-proof cellar, put stoppers in my ears, and keep my mouth open, and even then would see nothing, and that there was nothing anyway but a puff of vapor to see. So I went when they were getting the gun ready and made the drawing.

902 Five o'Clock.

With the first note of the buzzer, out the work-people come—a solid mass; you fly from thousands and thousands of them; and when they have gone another mass swarms in, for the work never stops, the mills never rest; and every eight hours the same thing happens.

903 Steel Bars.

The white-hot bars, escaping from the jaws, writhe and twist about, raising in agony their fiery heads, and then either climb a long incline into the light or squirm down into dark pits. Then they come out into a great shed or a great yard, and there they lie awhile to cool, till they are again seized by cranes or moving platforms, and brought to the guillotine, which cuts them into the lengths for shells.

904 Peace and War.

What would Ruskin have said to this? The beautiful old abbey, built in, surrounded by, yet still dominating the munition factories? What would he have said to the aeroplane, noisily soaring over it? I neither know nor care. I only know it was a fine composition as I saw it that morning, and so I drew it.

905 Munitions River.

The most amazing subject of all; but I was only allowed to get glimpses of it, not to go upon it, though once, when I was arrested, I was taken for a cruise on it in the hope of finding a Chief Constable whose existence I did not know of, and to whom none of the six other local, national, county, military, munitions, and war officials, whose consent I had obtained, referred me. However, it ended all right.

906 Gun Shop.

When the guns are forged, either whole or in part, they are brought into the gun shop, bored and planed; they come in silently, high in air, and then are lowered in place, lie in rows, in piles, in masses, waiting their turn to be finished.

907 Balloon Shed.

Around and about, all over the plain, the birds and bugs lie at rest, their wings making wonderful lines against the sky, wonderful colors on the grass. Then they stir and hum, and skim over the ground, and roar, and rise into the air, and sail away, and only the huge empty shed remains, and the long box on a lorry which, too, is leaving, with the sign on it: "Mesopotamia via Cardiff," whither another air machine is being shipped.

908 The Big Bug.

Horrible and awful it stood in its lair, ready to be started on its voyage of destruction.

909 Submarines in Dry Dock.

There they lay in long lines—soon to be ready to start on their venturesome voyages.

910 The Great Crane.

I knew it; I had drawn the twin brother of this monster two years before in the docks at Hamburg, and when I asked the engineer if it was not so, he said it was, and also pointed out how the smaller cranes put up previously showed the growth of the Wonder of Work.

911 The Cauldrons.

Another type of furnace, another system, for all these furnaces, all these works, have character—a character as distinct as in any other form of great art, for great work is great art.

AMERICAN WAR WORK:

NOTES BY THE ARTIST

Drawn with the authorization of the United States Government and exhibited by permission of the War and Navy Departments.

912 War Locomotives.

Big and little they are being turned for work in Europe and work at home. War work—and I could not forget that I had seen the same sort of work—on the same sorts of locomotives being done on the Isthmus, only—that was for peace—that was that the locomotives should help to build the Panama Canal, as they did.

913 Locomotives for the Allies.

In serried lines they stood—first one for Russia, then one for France, and on the other side several for ourselves—and I said, "Why, this is Ford's idea! for the parts came in at the sides of the shop and the finished engine went out at the end." "Oh, yes, only we have been doing it twenty years."

914 Submarine in Port.

Submarines are practical, but not picturesque. "Why do you draw 'em," said the usual inquirer—"Why do you make drawings, any way?" "Oh, for fun," says I. "Huh! That's what I thought," says he as he left.

915 The Flying Locomotive.

Yes, locomotives can soar—can fly—and, like Mahomet's coffin, stand in the air; and they do these things in a blaze of glory—because the shop where they are built is not big enough to shift them about in any other way. But the engine as it sailed toward me I tried to make a note of it. "Why would you like to draw it?" said the manager, as I frantically went on making notes of the approaching monster. "Which end would you like up?" It stopped and there it hung. "Bring on another," said the manager—and so I drew and so the creature posed till I had finished.

916 Building the Camp.

All sorts and conditions of machines, and of men, were at work on it. Steam-shovels removing mountains, gutters being dug as big as trenches, buildings going up and trees coming down as far as one could see—and further—the ideal of the man who said to me, as he looked over the tree-falling, town-rising landscape—"Gosh, it's fine! I am a carpenter here, but I never did no carpentering, 'cept I once did help to build a house with my pocketbook; but now I am getting six dollars a day and, well as it looks like a shower, I guess I won't pay the doctor ten dollars to cure a cold—no suh." So we came away in a jitney.

917 The Box Train Camp.

In the centre of the new city is something like a long train of box cars—yet when you see their sides you find they are houses. As you look they grow—and from a few holes in the ground till the building is finished takes, they told me, forty-five minutes. The Camps are better built than the English munition towns—but they are unbelievable—these cities of fifty thousand inhabitants built while the army was formed. This drawing is but a bit—to right and to left and behind the town stretched—the embodiment of usefulness, respectability—a triumph of ugliness.

918 The Shell Forge.

No composition could be finer, no movement more expressive, no grouping more perfect, and yet all this was happening every day and all day in an oily, dirty, greasy, smoky shell factory where no artist had ever worked before and the workmen, black men, were turning the big shell, under the big hammer, by the big capstan wheel that held it, and I noted in the shop, that the black men saw more in my drawings than the white, yet there is only one black painter in the country.

919 Armor Plate.

The English maker rolls rapidly his armor plate, in heat and smoke and flame. The American slowly presses it, but with a press so powerful it will crush the huge ingot, so sensitive that it will not break a watch crystal placed under it.

920 Little Men of the Big Hammer.

One seated on high worked the hammer, fast or slow, light or heavy were its blows as he wished.

Two beneath turned the big shell as it lay in its bed and was pounded into shape and every time the hammer fell, a pillar of fire and a cloud of steam arose, and through all and over all were the crane men in their pulpits, whistling and shouting and signalling, moving forth and back, silhouetted against the lights, lost in the shadows. And in this shop, as red hot shells flew about or rolled about singly or by dozens, one said, "Now, then, Cap., in this here shop, yer jes got ter look six ways for Sunday, that there crane man's all right, but might ferget youse was under, an' if that claw give yer a pat why youse ud have a week off in the hospittle."

921 Biggest Lathe in the World.

Many of the subjects I have chosen are probably the "biggest in the world" and the most impressive, too—that is the reason why I have drawn them. But I have seen great, great lathes and great guns in Europe, but this one is certainly greater than any other.

"You couldn't do that, Fatty," said the man. "Couldn't I," said the other—"You bet I could, if I had been at it as long as him." It was the second lathe I have drawn.

922 The Riveters.

What perpendicular cathedral is as full of mystery as this shop? I know of none, and I know most of them, and when the fires glow on the work altar—and the great jaws pierce and rivet the boiler plates, it is then one hears the Hymn of Work.

923 Making Rifles.

Gallery after gallery is like this, in the great building, all filled with tiny men, working at tiny machines, to make the tiny guns they fight with; and over them hangs the flag of the country, put there, the director told me, not by the management but by the men.

924 From Shop to Shop.

The contrast between the dark old shop and bright new one was wonderful.

"Pretty good, Dad," said a precocious apprentice. I suppose they don't mean anything but compliments, still I never fail to lose my temper, then the peacemaker appears—"Don't mind that kid, mate, he dunno no better, he's edurkated! Say, wot paper's it comin' out in—I'll buy that paper." That was a compliment.

925 Brobinag and the Press.

Only Swift never imagined, and Gulliver never saw, presses and ladles and chains and cranes like these, but I have seen them, and there is no imagination in my study of the press or the ladle. A press so powerful it will slowly bend the thickest plate. A ladle so big the men were lost in it. Gulliver would have been lost beside these.

926 The Old Hangar.

All the inventor's past life hung from the roof, successes and failures, trials and tribulations—and this old hangar like an old barn was worth drawing. Doubtless the new hangars are better suited to their purpose, but they are most unpicturesque, and so will all the world be too, before long. What could be more unpicturesque than the modern soldier, more ridiculous than the modern sailor. I mean their costumes.

927 Launching the Hydroplane.

Somewhere at an Aviation Post, every morning early, the aeroplanes start seaward, pushed and coaxed and pulled along like a stubborn mule—and about as beautiful—but once they are up and away, after splashing and floundering clumsily, how calm, how graceful, how serene they are as they move in and out amid the clouds in sunlight and shadow, over the summer ship-decked sea.

928 The Birds of War.

Like birds, and they are birds, the planes chase each other around the field, now they soar, then they dive, in the sun they glitter, in the shadows they disappear, and far and near, high and low, they rise, they soar, they plunge, and then they skim feeling for the ground, and then they come to rest upon it—the Birds of War.

929 The Lark.

“Hark, Hark the Lark,” this one sings a song too, all his own, as he soars up to greet the coming sun, then away to battle, or to train for it. Our Lark.

930 Birds on the Beach.

Why do they remind one of Greek warriors with their proud helmets? I do not know, but they do. I suppose, in fact it is, because the line of the rudder is that of the crest of a helmet. Did the Aeroplane builder steal, borrow, invent it? I once invented out of my head and a honeysuckle, another phase of Greek art, but no one would believe me.

931 Out on the Plane.

Why again is there such a swing and lift about these lines—because they are right and strong lines—and when the machines stand about how like they are to great clumsy birds—and when they try to start they are, too; but once they have started, how beautiful they are.

932 The Balloon Shed.

I only know of this one "balloon shed" in the country—probably in design it is out of date—but pictorially it is fine.

933 Gun Press.

When the ingot comes from the furnace it is put in this press, deep buried in a pit, and the hot metal is compressed into the shape of a section of a great Gun—then it is taken out and bored and planed and finally, after about a year of work, it is ready to do its work.

934 Unloading Ore Boats.

When the great ore boats arrive "somewhere," they draw up at a crane covered dock, and almost as fast as they were loaded they are emptied, and the ore is in the furnace, and they steam away for more.

935 The Shell Factory.

When I got there I showed my Government letter. "Umph," said the guard—and the sentinel with his gun was behind him—"You jus' don't come in here, ole man, on that pass—Gover'ment!—the boss is the Gover'ment—I'm the Ajertant! This here's the Lootenant! The Lor' Gawd Amity won't pass in on that pass!" But the next time I came the guard presented arms.

936 Casting Shells from Ladle.

Slowly the ladle moves, carried by the crane man, steered by the workmen, goggled and gloved—I had no time to draw those details. Into each mould it dropped just enough molten metal to make a shell-head. And when all the moulds were filled a man from another shop dropped in—"Say, what youse up to now?" "Me—I'm makin' shells for the Kaiser." "What! an' here!" "Sure"—and as a French inspector passed—"Aint we sending 'em to him as quick as we kin?"

937 The Gun Shop.

So like a British one that I wonder which got the idea of arrangement of the shop from the other, but here the guns are turned; and one man said to me: "Well, I don't know whether I'll be drafted by the U. S.—but I do know I'd sooner waste my time makin' guns, then spend it hearin' 'em shot at me by some Dutchman."

938 The Gun Pit: Tempering Guns.

These pits which I have drawn in Europe and America have the greatest individuality of all the processes of war industry. The buildings are impressive, towering, windowless, sombre without, mysterious within, filled with strong shadows and strange shapes.

And as I looked out from the blackness to the ore crane, making new ranges of Alps on its hillside, I wanted a gun—or rather wanted to know how it was moved.

"Why, bring him one," said the manager—and it came, and posed while I drew, and was such a good sitter. And so I find my studio and my models wherever I work.

939 Old and New.

Whether the old wooden ship is finer in line than the new steel monster is more than I can decide, but I do know that both are well worth drawing.

940 The Keel.

The shipyards are endless, and their forms are endless and ever new—but I never before found one where from the water I could look down on the ship as it grew—as it did here, amid its forests, its walls, which the ship in turn would soon tower over.

941 Under the Cranes: Building Destroyers.

How the cranes minister to the ships, carrying them the things they want, lowering them gently into the places where they belong and then hovering over the vessels they are building to see that everything is in its proper place—the cranes do it all—the man who runs them is a mere detail.

942 Building Destroyers.

Amid these great ways the little destroyers are built. While the work of building is going on, there seem to be no workmen about—though the noise they make is terrible. The various parts of the ships lie about apparently in confusion, but the crane knows what it wants and where to find it and picks it up and carries it to its proper place. It is only when the men knock off that you see what an army is engaged in shipbuilding. And it was too funny to be told as I went about—I could not smoke—yet hundreds of drills and riveters are shedding showers of sparks and there is nothing but iron about.

943 Gun Testing.

Into the rocky cliff great holes had been bored, and the Guns, mounted on their carriages by the great gantry, were fired, passing through wires mounted on screens. One thing that interested me, standing behind the guns—interested me too much, really, was that there was no smoke, save that which came out of the hole where the shell exploded. And another fact was that I could not see the shell in its flight—nor can those at whom it is fired—it goes so fast that sound and sight cannot keep up with it.

944 Boat Builders.

"I am jus real proud of this hull shop, I am jus certain jack proud of it," said the foreman, and what could be more graceful than the lines of these wooden boats—all the boats of battleships seem made of wood—and how beautiful are their lines, the result of tradition. The boat builder is no cubist, as he works out his drawings on the floor of the shop, and the result is strength and beauty.

945 The Collier.

This is a freighter and collier and the huge erections on its deck are cranes and derricks by which other ships are coaled and loaded at sea. The system is not new, but I imagine many landmen, like myself, have never seen such a creature before.

946 The Ants.

She came into the dry dock "at an Atlantic port." The water was pumped out, ropes were dropped over the side, and when it was out men at the bottom of the locks fastened planks to them, and raised the planks to the sides and the crew with buckets of paint and brushes long and little, short and big, swarmed over the sides, and fell with the paint upon the ship, and while I stared and tried to draw, she was painted, both sides of her, and her propellers were polished like gold, by the ants—only ants don't work like that, only American sailors, and a few weeks before many of them had never seen a big ship.

947 Battleships in Port.

Just as retired officers have offered their services again to the country—so these old ships, even more pictorial than the new, are being found places where they can do their “bit.”

948 Transports.

The spoils of war, for what had been great traders are now to be great troop ships, and with their transformation what an awful change has come to our world.

949 Ready to Start.

Dignified, solemn, immense she stood, held to the dock by the great cables; and the great cranes swing great carloads of war work aboard her, as fast as the engines could bring them.

On land she was guarded by marines. In the air the planes were guarding her.

950 The Ship Building Shed.

It seemed as though this yard was built for me—and if it were not that I found it so practical, I should have thought it only pictorial.

In the shed in rows, in piles, in layers, lay every part of the ship ready to fit together, all in order; as I drew, boats and boilers came out of the shop and went to their places on board.

951 Building a Battleship.

Inside the huge shed where she was built, and launched, she lay, getting her finishing touches or rather those that could be given her—for her masts were too big to finish, her turrets were being fitted, and her turbines put in, and soon she would begin her life of terror and horror.

952 Building Submarine Chasers.

All round the big ship, the little boats gathered—being built out of doors anywhere, near the water, into which the crane swung them as soon as they were finished, and it is like this they are being built all over the country.

953 The Prow.

"Very pretty drawing," said the Admiral when I showed him this leering, staring, slobbering monster, the spirit of war, a creation of our time and our country. It fascinates and is intolerable.

954 In the Air, On the Sea and Under the Sea.

Not alone are we protected on the water, under the water and in the air. I was lucky enough to see somewhere near "An Atlantic Port" the three methods of protection.

955 The Dry Dock.

These are the things that tower—that shine—whose power is terrible—but their smile does not make glad.

The officer said he could not see the ship like that—"Don't you wish you could," was the only answer I could think of.

956 Oil Refinery.

After the oil has come from the well it has to be refined, and this is usually done far from the wells. At any rate, the most picturesque refineries are hundreds of miles from them. Though the refiners had no idea of making them pictorial, they and their methods have produced unconsciously the most wonderful pictorial effect.

957 Oil Wells.

I have never yet found a perfectly satisfactory oil field, as a subject for the Wonder of Work. The wells are not big enough, they are all alike, and there is no smoke. I confess I once thought an oil well gushed like a geyser, hundreds of feet in the air, and, when it was not doing that, belched forth gorgeous columns and clouds of smoke. I was told that the first was prevented with difficulty, and that by dropping a match into the pipe I could easily produce the second effect—though either might cost me a million. Still, the fact remains, I have yet to find a really fine oil field—and a really fine effect over it. The refineries, however, make up for the wells.

958 Munition Town.

Always when I have been going or coming east or west I have meant to stop, for from the train it seemed so fine. Now I have stopped and know it is far finer than I imagined, and there are endless subjects up and down the river banks, but this one of the steel works seems to me the finest—as magnificent as any I have ever seen anywhere.

959 The Invocation.

One might think this was a modern Muezzin invoking the God of War or a Bishop giving his blessing to the guns, but really it is a foreman telling the crane men by yelling and shouting and whistling and signalling how to carry the guns to their oil bath.

960 Making Propellers.

Blue in the shadows and such blue—gold in the light and such gold—were those blades—in this great shop—and as I worked the engine steamed in, and carried one set off to fit in the ship standing in the dock just outside.

961 The Battleship Coming Home.

Hidden in her smoke veil, the great battleship came home. She was not damaged, but she was being pulled and coaxed and led and followed by a mass of tugboats, which were as picturesque as necessary, to bring her into the dock.

962 The Great White Hammer.

"The biggest hammer in the world," said the foreman; maybe—any way, the Shop was amongst the most pictorial of all those I have drawn devoted to shell making.

"Say, Friend," said the workman, "won't they let yer use a machine, in war time? Is that why youse does it by hand?"

963 Forges.

How fine are the effects—but one man said as I drew the figure leaning back to rest—"Hully gee! He's got Creeper all right. Look at his pants!" But the noise is awful and one day as I sat on a bit of boiler, a racket ten times worse than ever before broke out beneath me and I jumped right off and from the boiler crawled a grimy, human who, putting his hand to his mouth, yelled, "What yer making all that racket fur?"

964 The Smelter.

I have seen many volcanoes, a few in eruption—that was terrible—but this great smelter at Anaconda always, while I was there, pouring from its great stack high on the mountain its endless cloud pall of heavy, drifting, falling smoke, was more wonderful—for this volcano is man's work and one of the Wonders of Work. Dead and gray and bare are the nearby hills; glorious the snow-covered peaks far off, but incredible is this endless rolling, changing pillar of cloud, always there, yet always different—and that country covered with great lakes, waterless, glittering, great lava beds of refuse stretching away in every direction.

965 To the Embarkation Camp.

No, this is not in Italy—but America. Another proof that the classical, the romantic landscape is all about us—only if it had not been that the Embarkation Camp was by this grove, I never should have seen it.

966 Gun Dip.

No better proof could be shown of the way each big plant puts big character into its products than this and the previous drawing. Here everything is done deep down under ground; in the other shop it is all above, away up high in the air. And one day, they told me, the president of the company passed with a party—and he saw a man, tired out, sitting with his head in his hands. "Why don't you clean out the pit, boy?" "Well, Sammie, if you want to know why, you go down an' find out for yourself."

967 Building a Turbine.

This is the finest shop in which the most impressive work of modern times is done and it is somewhere in America; and as I worked away after five, one man said—"Wot's yer hours, mate?"

968 Furnaces.

The lines of the winding waterways, each leading to a furnace, a mill, an elevator, are simply beautiful and the color absolutely lovely. This is the modern landscape—a landscape that Claude would have loved. All his composition is in it—only the mills have replaced the palaces, the trestle the aqueduct; instead of the stone pine, there stands the water tower; instead of the cypress, the automatic signal; instead of the Cross, the trolley pole. Soon, however, all this will go—the mystery of the smoke will vanish in the clearness of electricity, and the mystery of the trestle in the plainness of the concrete bridge. But it is here now, and the thing is to delight in it. Artists don't see it—and the railroad men who have made it don't know any more than the Greeks what a marvellous thing they have made.

969 The Most Picturesque Place in America.

The most pictorial place in America—therefore no one stops at it—and most people pass it in the night or do not take the trouble to look out of the car windows as they go by. But there it is. On the mountain side spring up the huge shafts. The top is crowned not with trees, but with chimneys. Low black villages of miners' houses straggle toward the foot of the mountain. The barren plain is covered with gray, slimy masses of refuse which crawl down to it—glaciers of work—from the hills. The plain is seared and scored and cracked with tiny canyons, all their lines leading to the mountain. If you have the luck to reach the town early in the morning you will find it half revealed, half concealed in smoke and mist and steam, through which the strange shafts struggle up to the light, while all round the horizon the snow peaks silently shimmer above the noisy hidden town. If you have the still better fortune to reach it late in the evening you will see an Alpine glow that the Alps have never seen. In the middle of the day the mountains disappear and there is nothing but glare and glitter, union men and loafers about.

TO Picture Lovers

IF you are interested in pictures we wish you would visit our galleries with the same freedom as you would the Pennsylvania Academy of the Fine Arts.

We have a representative collection of the best things in the artistic world—of paintings, water-colors, engravings, etchings, prints in colors. As members of the British Print Sellers' Association we offer the latest publications on the day that they appear in London.

In addition to the modern school we have old prints and etchings of great variety and beauty; French line-engravings; English color-prints after George Morland; old copper-plates by Dürer; etchings by Rembrandt, Meryon and Whistler.

¶ As a temporary home for the Art Students Philadelphia has unique advantages. Known as the "City of Homes," it affords good living at a lower cost than is possible in any other large city in the East.

¶ In historical interest it is rich, and its suburbs, easy of access, offer unusual chance for out-of-door work. Opportunities for general culture are varied and the Academy is fortunately able to secure special rates for its students to many of the lectures and concerts given each season.

¶ The Academy itself is centrally located and within short walking distance from it are good boarding-places. The two principal railroad stations are each within five minutes' walk.

¶ Recognizing that a comfortable living place is an aid to serious study the management invites correspondence with students from a distance and offers freely its information and its aid.

James Whatman.
 from a Painting
 [about 1770]

Made for master artists now as then

When James Whatman began the making of his drawing paper 150 years ago, he had an ideal—the production of a paper good enough for master artists. Through exclusive processes and unequalled care in manufacture, he made that ideal a reality. Foremost artists—among them Constable, Turner, Whistler—have entrusted to Whatman paper the perpetuation of their genius.

WHATMAN DRAWING PAPERS are to-day distinguished by the same purity of substance, the same skill and pride in the making that first brought them fame.

There is a Whatman grade to bring out the best features of your work.
